ABSTRACT

This list of 450 books and 67 journals is intended as a selection guide to be used in a library supporting allied health educational programs and personnel in either an academic or health care setting. Due to the necessity of limiting the scope of coverage because of the large number and wide variety of allied health professions and occupations, the recommended publications are focused mainly on the twenty-six educational programs accredited by the Committee on Allied Health Education and Accreditation of the American Medical Association, in addition to programs in allied dental health and medical secretarial skills. Books are categorized by broad subject followed by an author/editor index; journals are listed alphabetically by title. To purchase the entire collection of books and to pay for annual (1984) journal subscriptions would require a total expenditure of approximately $15,000.

THE LITERATURE of allied health is multifarious and massive. It is probably a less well-known body of literature to many health sciences librarians than are those of medicine, nursing, and dentistry. Since the 1960s, there has been a steady shifting of allied health education from hospitals and medical centers to collegiate settings, and this trend continues. It was most dramatic in junior and community colleges during the past decade; presently the largest segment of allied health programs is in these two-year institutions. Although more than half of the training programs are now in academic settings, one-third remain in health care institutions. Therefore, developing collections of allied health literature has been and still is a challenge both to health sciences and to academic librarians. In its accrediting process, the Committee on Allied Health Education and Accreditation of the American Medical Association requires that in the library "students shall have ready access to an adequate supply of up-to-date books, periodicals, and other reference materials related to the curriculum" [1]. To meet this requirement, selecting allied health literature, especially books, is a complicated task for the experienced individual and a rather impossible one for the neophyte because there are so many books on the market, and, as a whole, they have not been scrutinized and organized bibliographically in a systematic manner.

To confront this situation, for the past three years we have been reviewing the literature of allied health for the purpose of compiling a selected list of books and journals. One of the first things that we discovered was the difficulty of determining exactly what comprises allied health literature, for the term "allied health" means many things to many people, and it is impossible to find a definition on which there is a consensus of opinion. Early on, allied health referred to just about every aspect of health care, with the exception of the physician. This concept, of course, is no longer true; and the graduates of schools of osteopathy, dentistry, veterinary medicine, pharmacy, optometry, podiatry, and nursing, as well as medicine, are usually considered as autonomous health professionals and are not included under the designation of allied health. After eliminating the literature of these professions, we were still faced with an overwhelming amount of materials; for there are over 200 discrete health professions and occupations, ranging from hospital orderly to physician assistant and health science librarian, that have been ascribed to the umbrella term of allied health.

To make this project realistically doable, we decided to compile a selected book and journal list that would predominantly support the twenty-six educational programs accredited by the AMA

Committee on Allied Health Education and Accreditation which appear in the Allied Health Education Directory [2]. After consulting the syllabus for the Medical Library Association continuing education course on the literature of allied health, we felt that this plan was the most practical to follow [3]. In addition, we also decided to include the literature of allied dental personnel (dental hygienists, dental assistants, and dental laboratory technicians) and that for medical secretaries because of the large numbers of educational programs existing in these two areas.

As we progressed with our work, we became aware that there was not a distinct literature for some of the accredited programs for allied medical personnel. For example, the educational programs for the physician assistant rely heavily on books in the basic and behavioral sciences as well as standard medical texts; many of the medical texts can be identified as items recommended for initial purchase in our book and journal list for the small medical library [4]. A number of various allied health books are also used in the physician assistant program. In 1980, a Selected Annotated Bibliography of the Physician Assistant Profession was published by the Association of Physician Assistant Programs; it consists chiefly of citations to journal articles and government publications [5]. The programs for surgical assistants or technologists are supported largely by the literature of surgical and operating room nursing; recommended books on these topics are noted in our list of nursing books and journals [6].

For the most part, we have selected books and journals that are geared to allied health personnel, but if a medical text is an integral part of an allied health discipline, it has been included. Emphasis is on recent materials, mainly of United States and Canadian origin. A few standard works by English authors are also included in the book list. It should be remembered that because our emphasis is on recent materials, older works which still may be relevant to allied health education do not appear in this book list. We have included self-study books which are frequently used in allied health education programs; this type of book has not appeared in our other selected lists. We have recommended a number of examination review books put out by major medical publishing companies such as Mosby and Lippincott, but many more exist on the market; catalogs of such publishers as the Medical Examination Publishing Company and Arco Publishing Company should be consulted for additional titles to meet individual needs. Standard medical books should be available to allied health personnel for reference purposes; no library supporting these programs is adequate without them.

During the process of compiling this list, we have sought help from librarians and other individuals involved in allied health education. We have received a great deal of information from publishers and medical book and journal vendors. However, the collection of allied health literature that we recommend represents our selection. We have attempted to include publications that are authoritative, readable, well-organized, and generally accepted by educators in the allied health field. Obviously, some of our choices have fallen short of these criteria, for in some instances, the book we have chosen is the only one that exists for a specific aspect of a subject. We intend that this list should serve only as a guide in developing a collection of allied health literature and should not be regarded as a rigid standard. It is vitally important that one keep up to date on new allied health books and journals as they are published. This list will be updated in a newsletter titled A Major Report, which is compiled and edited by the senior author [7]. Beginning in 1984, the Cumulative Index to Nursing & Allied Health Literature contains an appendix in which new nursing and allied health books are listed by CINAHL subject headings [8]. Each year, Majors Scientific Books, Inc. issues an Allied Health Book List [9]. Medical Books 84 contains a section on allied health books; it, too, is published annually and is distributed free of charge by various medical book vendors [10]. None of these three lists is evaluative. However, a Suggested List of Medical Books & Journals with a supplemental list of books and journals for the allied health sciences is put out biennially by the Ontario Medical Association, and the publications included do carry the Association's recommendation [11].

The books in our list are arranged according to broad subject headings followed by an author/editor index. If a new edition of a book is scheduled for 1984 or early 1985, that is the one that we have included with the comment, "In preparation." When a book has more than two authors or editors, the notation "[and others]" is made after the name of the senior author or editor. We have cited a multiauthored book under the name of the senior editor. In the author/editor index, we have listed only the senior authors or editors; joint authors and editors do not appear. When the name of an original author or editor of a multiedition book is an integral part of the title, we have also included it in the index. Recommended journals are listed alphabetically by title and follow this index.

The bibliographic and price information given here is as accurate as we could obtain at the time of publication, but price increases should be anticipated. Based on the prices that we have quoted, it would cost approximately $15,000 to purchase the entire collection of books and journals. The 450 books cost about $12,400, and the 67 journal subscriptions for 1984 amount to $2,600. The average price per book title is $27.60, and the average cost of the journal subscriptions is $38.47. Because of the diversity of the subjects contained in this list, it is likely that most individuals using it will not want to purchase all of the publications but probably will use it selectively for programs pertinent to their situations. Therefore, for budgetary purposes, in Table 1 we have given the approximate total cost for each subject section of the list.

Because of the subject limitations that we adhered to, a number of areas in allied health have not been addressed—notably, dietetics and nutrition, health care administration, psychology, social work in health care settings, biomedical engineering, audiology, speech pathology, and specialized rehabilitation services. While working on this project, we became aware of three excellent articles relating to the literature of nutrition [12], rehabilitation [13], and radiologic technology [14]; they are well worth reading when one is developing a collection in any of these subjects. A new core journal list for libraries supporting health care administration programs and personnel has been published this summer [15]; a comparable recommended book list is also needed. Although pharmacy is not generally included as an allied health profession, we feel that the book list for pharmaceutical education issued by the American Association of Colleges of Pharmacy in 1983 should be mentioned here because it is a helpful guide for anyone setting up or evaluating a pharmacy collection [16].

The provision of quality, essential health care is the ultimate purpose of allied health personnel. The trend in the 1980s is the refining and improving of training programs as opposed to the rapid, sometimes short-planned expansion of the 1970s. The educational needs and potentials of the allied health sciences must be given the proper attention. Without adequate informational resources, this cannot be done. Presenting the literature of allied health as a unified whole is an important step in this direction, and the selected list of books and journals that we have prepared is really only a starting point.
